Business Men Dine and Talk About Credit

Merchants' Credit Association Hears Talks About Necessity of Giving People Proper Credit Rating In Order That Honest Customers Shall Not Be Compelled to Make Up Deficiencies Caused By Deadbeats.

Members of the Merchants' Credit Association and their friends filled the main dining room of the Governor Clinton Hotel Thursday night and partook of an excellent chicken dinner. The occasion was a get together meeting of the members in order to meet and hear Guy H. Hulse, who is field secretary of the service division of the Retail Credit Men's National Association, and more than 120 persons were in attendance, representing banks, wholesale houses, manufacturers and retail stores. Clifford Bennett, president of the Merchants' Credit Association, presided and acted as toastmaster.

Many facts in relation to the need for and operation of the association were brought out by the various speakers and it was made very clear that the organization is much more than a mere agency for the collecting of bad debts. By gathering data and giving credit ratings, it prevents bad debts by shutting off from credit those to whom credit should not be extended. Emphasis was laid on the fact that this is of distinct benefit to the honest customer and that the honest customer should insist that he be rated by the bureau so that if at any time he desires credit a report can be made on him without delay.

Honest People Pay for Dishonest.

In the absence of a systematic method for obtaining ratings on those seeking credit the merchant often refused credit to persons whose trade was desirable and who were really honest and good pay, while he would often be beguiled by the glib tongue of a rascal and extend credit to those who seldom paid except under compulsion and not always then. A credit bureau enables the merchant to extend credit to those who are honest and to refuse credit to the dishonest and imprudent. As losses from bad accounts must be made up at the expense of those who pay, the elimination of losses is of direct benefit to the honest customer, as the consumer always pays in the end—unless he is a dead beat who never pays and whose bills have to be covered by the prices paid by the honest man.

How Association Has Grown.

President Bennett briefly reviewed the inception and growth of the association, which is a child of the Ulster County Provision Dealers Association, organized by the retail grocers about three years ago to correct trade abuses. Inevitably the question of bad accounts loomed up and the Credit Association was formed and has grown to a membership of 300, with branches in Delhi, Catskill, Saugerties and Ellenville.

Ratings Are Up-To-Date.

Benjamin Suskind, organizer of the association and its manager, outlined methods and results. In 1925 it collected $20,000 of old accounts and in 1926 it has collected $40,000. In the year and a half it has been in existence not one checking has gone wrong and members have gained a large number of excellent credit accounts, at the same time avoiding the extending of credit to those who do not pay their bills. The bureau is making an average of 1,500 checkings a month. Its ratings are kept up to date and there is no reason why a merchant should suffer any credit losses. Credit abused ruins honest but improvident men and often the bureau save those men from their own indiscretions and keeps them honest.

Essentials of Success.

Mr. Hulse gave a talk, illustrated with charts, on business methods generally. Reduced to few words, his points were that to succeed a merchant must have the goods, well arranged in a good store, give good and intelligent service and then advertise. For advertising there is no medium so efficient as the newspaper. The newspaper also has a duty to support policies for the good of the community.

Business Shows and Displays.

Special events should be arranged and advertised. There should be an automobile show, a builders' show, a style show and a food show each year. There should be good display of merchandise. There should be frequent group meetings of merchants at which men talk over their business. This will be followed by the development of better ethics.

Kingston Association Leads.

Mr. Hulse said that of all the 500 credit bureaus in the country there was none better than that in Kingston. Not only is Kingston the equal of the best, but it has many features that others do not have, the news of which he intended to carry to the others so that they might follow the example set by Kingston. He also spoke highly of the Christmas decorations and the enterprise shown in catering to the Christmas trade in Kingston and concluded with the prescription for proper merchandising: Good stores, good merchandise, proper prices, effective advertising and proper display.

Yale's New Idea Of Exercise

New York, Dec. 10 (AP).—"The Daily Score," rival of Walter Camp's famous "daily dozen," is Yale's second contribution to those who would take their exercise in small but telling quantities.

The new system—the slogan is "keep the back of your neck against your collar and relax now and then,"—has been developed by Dr. William Gilbert Anderson, director of Yale's gymnasium.

"Must lift your head, draw in your chin until the back of your neck presses against your collar, arch your chest to its utmost and draw in the abdominal muscles," are the instructions. "You will look better, feel better, and in a few weeks you will find your posture greatly improved," Dr. Anderson promises.

Coolidges to Live In the Mayflower

Washington, Dec. 10 (AP).—President and Mrs. Coolidge, the Washington Post has learned, will move into a special suite in the Mayflower Hotel after congress adjourns in March to enable workmen to repair the White House, which has been declared unsafe for some years by experts.

Congress has appropriated $375,000 to cover the expense of the repairs, which include construction of a new roof, and of this amount $25,000 was allotted for defraying the rental and incidental expenses of the President while living away from the official residence.

Impatient Thief Steals Xmas Trees

Notwithstanding the announcement that there would be free Christmas trees for poor persons, some impatient thief has been stealing the trees that decorate the sidewalks on lower Broadway. Ultimately these trees will be given away, but the merchants who bought them think that until the time comes for the donating they should enjoy the use of their own property and any cases of theft will be rigorously prosecuted.

Anne Caldwell Awarded $50,000

Pittsburgh, Dec. 10 (AP).—Miss Anne Caldwell, New York showgirl, was awarded $50,000 by a federal court jury today in her $500,000 breach of promise suit against John W. Hubbard, Pittsburgh shovel manufacturer. The award was made in a sealed verdict agreed upon during the night and returned to Judge W. H. S. Thomson at the opening of court.

2 Die When Car Hits Snowplow

New Rochelle, N. Y., Dec. 10 (AP).—Two persons were killed and two others were injured when their automobile collided with a snowplow on the Boston Post Road in Pelham Manor early today.

The dead are Elmer L. Hammedau, theatre manager of New Rochelle, and Miss Eleanor Jordan of City Island.

Clifford Kinsbury of New Rochelle and Ellen Harris of Prospect, were seriously hurt.

Edward Connelly, motorman of the snowplow, was arrested on a technical charge of homicide.

SNOW KEEPS CITY FREE OF CRIME; NO ARRESTS

Whether it is the fact that the snow fall of Sunday and again of Thursday night and today has kept every one so busy in opening the streets and sidewalks to traffic, the police records show that no arrests have been made in Kingston for the past two days.

Santa Coming on Rhinebeck Ferry

Reaches City at 3:30 O'clock Saturday Afternoon—Children Will March to Ferry to Meet Him—Band to Head Parade.

Santa Claus sent word to the Downtown Business Men's Association this morning that he was glad to see more snow falling as it would make it easier for him to reach the Strand with his reindeer and sled. His huge bag is packed and he is shining the harness and grooming his chargers for his visit to the kiddies of Kingston and vicinity when he reaches here on Saturday at 3:30 on the Rhinebeck ferry.

Santa will surely be surprised when he reaches Kingston on Saturday by way of the Rhinebeck ferry and beholds a group of kiddies with a band to escort him to the Community Christmas Tree at the corner of the Strand and Broadway.

Children March to Ferry.

Maisenhelder's Citizen Band will furnish the music for the parade of children from St. Mary's School to the ferry and for the concert which will be held in the evening. The band will also escort Santa from the Rhinebeck ferry to the community Christmas Tree and St. Nick is sure of enjoying the music, for Harry Maisenhelder knows just what to play not only to please Santa but all the kiddies and their parents.

Santa will be delighted when he is escorted through the avenue of pretty colored lights and Christmas trees that line the Strand and lower Broadway on both sides, and nothing could be more pleasing to him than the immense Community Christmas Tree with its 150 colored lights and huge star of Bethlehem scintillating from the peak of the trees.

Santa On Hand In Evening.

St. Nick will be on hand in the evening when the band concert takes place to greet the shoppers. All the windows will be decorated with delicate shades of lighting and will contain the merchandise sold by the store, artistically arranged before the public. Extra help will be secured for the occasion by the merchants and everyone is invited to inspect the merchandise displayed by the business men.

The Community Tree trimmed by the Tuderoff Brothers, who are doing all the wiring of the Downtown section was lighted Thursday night and presented a most delightful aspect, and today the downtown section gave forth the spirit of Christmas as the snow fell upon many evergreen trees that line the business section on both sides of the streets.

Smith's Wet Stand And Not Religion Stirs Methodists

Secretary of Methodist Church Board Denies That Religion Is Motive Behind Opposition To Governor Smith—Put Wadsworth In The Ditch.

Washington, Dec. 10 (AP).—The board of temperance, prohibition and public morals of the Methodist Episcopal Church opposes Governor Smith of New York "for his wetness, not for his religion," its secretary, Dr. Clarence True Wilson, said today in his annual report. He also took occasion to commend President Coolidge's stand on prohibition enforcement in his message to Congress.

The Methodist Church is not seeking temporal power in Washington, said Dr. Wilson's report, nor is it "lobbying," but is exercising through the board its "full right of petition and organizing public influence."

The defeat of Senator Wadsworth of New York was described as "one of the most significant victories prohibition forces have yet won." Wadsworth was charged with responsibility for steering dry legislation "into the ditch" at the last session of Congress.

"This showed that the ditch was his favorite place," said Dr. Wilson, "and we decided that he belonged in it, and we would put him there."

In denying that religion was the motive behind opposition to Governor Smith, he declared that the "temperance forces would have been supporters of Senator Walsh of Montana, who, like Smith, is a communicant of the Catholic Church, if he had been nominated by the Democrats in 1924."

"We shall stand for a man who is loyal to the 18th Amendment and its enforcement regardless of whether he is a Methodist, Catholic or Jew," he added.

The Anti-Saloon League and other dry organizations supported Frank L. Smith for the senatorship in Illinois, Dr. Wilson explained, solely because he stood for prohibition.

Salvation Army XmasDinnerFund

Kettles on Street Corners to Remind Citizens of Their Opportunity to Provide Baskets for Those Less Fortunate.

The local Salvation Army is preparing to provide Christmas dinners for the needy of this city and workers are investigating to learn of worthy families that need assistance.

The kettles used by the Salvation Army every year were placed on the street corners today and a worker will be stationed at each and have a bell with which to remind the passerby that the army is seeking help in order to aid the needy. The entire funds deposited in the kettles will be used to purchase the Christmas baskets which will contain fourteen different articles of food including a chicken. Checks will also be accepted from the citizens and they may be made payable to the Salvation Army and sent to Ensign Miller of the local branch.

There will also be a Christmas tree in the Salvation Army Barracks on North Front street for the children who are not fortunate enough to have one in their homes.

Mayor Dempsey advocates the good work of the Salvation Army and is much in favor of the "Keep the Pot Aboiling" campaign conducted by the organization.

The following is a proclamation from the mayor:

The annual Christmas dinner fund of the Salvation Army is about to be inaugurated. This fund is to provide a measure of Christmas cheer for the less fortunate of our people. It is such a worthy cause that I have no hesitation is indorsing it.

E. J. DEMPSEY,
Mayor of Kingston.

Ex-Dry Chief Was "No Lily"

San Francisco, Dec. 10 (AP).—A man who admitted he drank and wanted the public to know he was "no lily"—thus was Colonel Ned M. Green, deposed prohibition administrator, on trial for embezzling government liquor, portrayed in federal court here yesterday.

The picture was sketched by J. Johnson, newspaper man and son of Colonel Samuel I. Johnson, who formerly was Green's immediate subordinate.

The term "no lily," Johnson said, was a part of the former dry chief's description of himself in an interview about the time of his indictment last July in which he said that he did not want to be known as a hypocrite.

Johnson's father previously had testified that liquor was served at a dinner attended by Colonel Green but nobody drank much.

The adoption of an employes' payroll deduction life insurance plan that will be offered by the New York Telephone Company to its employes was announced Thursday by Vice-President P. T. Sylvan, in charge of personnel.

Official confession was lacking and Herman Goodstein, counsel for the Count, denied last night that any settlement had been made.

"I know nothing of such an offer," he said. "I know nothing of any proposal to settle the suit out of court. I deny that any monetary offer of settlement had been made to either Count Salm or myself."

Probing Cause Of $100,000 Fire

Corning, N. Y., Dec. 10 (AP).—Fire of a mysterious origin leveled the two main buildings of the H. Sheldon Manufacturing Company at Elkland, Pa., early today, causing a loss of over $100,000. Congressman Gale H. Stalker of Elmira and his brother, O. C. Stalker of Elkland, owned the plant.

An investigation is under way this morning to ascertain the cause. The night watchman found everything in good shape while making his rounds only a few minutes before the outbreak and the sprinkling system was apparently all right at 1 o'clock. It evidently did not function, however. Two other buildings were not damaged.

Doheny Loaned $10,000,000 to General Obregon

In Form of Pre-Payment of Taxes On Mexican Property Held By Doheny Interests—"Saved the Situation" For Mexican President.

Washington, Dec. 10 (AP).—Under a penetrating cross-examination today by government counsel Edward L. Doheny stoutly maintained his denial that his oil transactions with the government were tainted with guilt but surprised the court with several new disclosures in his relations with Albert B. Fall.

Among other things he said that his now famous loan of $100,000 to Fall had been followed by at least one advance of $5,000 to the former interior secretary, and that Fall also had advised him in connection with an advance $10,000,000 to the Mexican government while General Obregon was president.

Defense counsel cut off further questioning about advances to Fall, with an objection that later was sustained by the court. Doheny is a co-defendant with Fall in the trial for criminal conspiracy.

Had Not Told Everything.

The witness also conceded that he had not told the senate oil committee "everything" when he appeared there in 1924, but he maintained that he had answered "truthfully" all the specific questions asked.

The cross-examination required two hours and a half. Throughout it was a quiet, direct exchange of suave question and soft reply between the witness and Owen J. Roberts for the government. Doheny appeared on the witness stand after a restless night, with an infected arm in a sling, and Roberts dropped from the start the grim and merciless method of attack which has characterized his examination of other government witnesses.

"Saved Situation" For Obregon.

Doheny could not recall the exact time of his $10,000,000 loan to the Obregon government in Mexico, but he indicated it was at the moment the de la Huerta revolution was threatening Obregon's supremacy at Mexico City. The witness said the $10,000,000 advance was in the form of the pre-payment of taxes on Mexican properties held by the Doheny interests, and that it "saved the situation" for Obregon.

On re-direct examination the oil magnate read a statement he submitted to the Los Angeles Federal court two years ago when he refused to testify, in response to a government summons, in the civil suit which nullified the Pan-American's Elk Hills lease. His refusal, he said, was on the ground that his testimony might prejudice his present trial.

"HANDSOMEST CONDUCTOR" CAUSE OF CLASH IN COURT

Vigorous Demonstration by One of the Ladies Upsets Judge. Then He Acts.

Lake Forest, Ill.—Justice Edwin Burgess' courtroom in Lake Forest was the scene of a bitter clash between Mrs O. S Holstrom of 611 Onwentsia avenue, Highland Park, and her neighbor, Mrs. Frank Kromer of 624 Onwentsia avenue. Their difference was over Mr. Kromer, an employee of the traction line in the suburbs, known as "that handsome street car conductor."

"Why!" Mrs Kromer said to Chief Lester Tiffany of the Lake Forest force "Why! He's so handsome, positively, that every time the Pythian sisters have a meeting they go to lodge simply to ride on his car."

Mrs. Holstrom had Mrs. Kromer arrested. Charging disorderly conduct, she said Mrs. Kromer had shaken her fist in her—Mrs Holstrom's—face. Mrs Holstrom is thirty-four; Mrs. Kromer is fifteen years her senior. The arrest and the fist shaking came about like this:

"I was riding on my husband's street car," Mrs Kromer testified. "At Vine avenue in Highland Park, Mrs Holstrom got on. As she paid her fare I saw her wink at my husband. . . ."

"That's a lie!" interposed Mrs. Holstrom.

"She thought I didn't see her," Mrs. Kromer continued. "My Frank winked back."

"Where is Mr Kromer?" Justice Burgess inquired. "Where is 'that handsome conductor'?"

Chief Tiffany spoke up: "He's not here; he told me Mrs. Kromer had got herself into other scrapes like this, and she'd have to get herself out."

"Well," continued Mrs. Kromer, "at Noble avenue, Lake Forest, Mrs. Holstrom got off my husband's car. I got off with her. I said, 'I want you to stay off my husband's car.'"

"Yes," said Mrs. Holstrom, "she rushed up to me and shook her fist in my face."

Said Mrs. Kromer heatedly: "I did. I did it because she pushed me, your honor, pushed me like this!"

And with that Mrs. Kromer—demonstrating—gave Justice Burgess a swift push. The judicial chair teetered for an instant and then, with a crash went over, sending the judicial dignity sprawling on the floor. There was a moment of awful silence as Justice Burgess slowly got back to his feet. Then—

"Twenty-five and costs!" he shouted, pointing at Mrs. Kromer. "Twenty-five and costs! Get out of my courtroom!"

Man Gets $150 Balm for "Shocked-Off" Hair

Philadelphia.—Harry Riloff, thirty-four years old, was seated in the small truck of which he was driver, when a trolley car bumped the vehicle from the rear, causing Riloff to fall backward off his seat. He received some bruises, but had his hair "shocked off." The accident, Riloff told a jury before Judge Taulane in Common Pleas court, occurred August 28, 1925.

Riloff explained that within a week after the accident his hair started falling out and within two weeks he was completely bald. He tried thirteen physicians in an effort to rethatch his dome and finally went to a masseur, who was successful.

"Why were you so much annoyed about being bald?" Judge Taulane asked Riloff.

"Well, your honor, I am a single fellow, and I might want to get married," replied Riloff.

Riloff was given a verdict of $150 as damages.

Florist Is Accused of Taking Funeral Flowers

Omaha, Neb.—Carl Gulleta, Omaha florist, has been arrested under an old statute of "removing ornaments from a tomb," when two brothers told police he had robbed a vault in Holy Sepulcher cemetery of flowers he had sold them for their mother's funeral.

The brothers, John and Joseph Sedaro, said they discovered the alleged theft of flowers when they went to get a crucifix which they had left on the mother's coffin.

Gulleta said he wanted only the wire frames on the flowers, which cost $300, for another funeral.

"The woman is dead and can't appreciate flowers any more," the florist said. "I don't see why there would be any objection to removing them."

Nine Wives Widows as Hubby Succumbs

New York.—Nine wives were bereaved when their collective husband, John Lawrence Leclaire, died in Clinton prison, Dannemora, where he was serving a sentence of five years for bigamy and two years for perjury.

His recorded wives were: Frances, of Ogdensburg, N. Y.; Rose, of Port Chester; Anna, of New York; Dora, of Syracuse; Edna, of Fitchburg, Mass.; Maude of Lake George, N. Y.; Maude of Gloucester; Bertha of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and Flora, of Cohoes, N. Y.

Bertha [illegible] of Poughkeepsie caused Leclaire's arrest.

TOO MANY DIAMONDS.

The world loves the rare and costly, which only the fortunate few can possess and can thereby be distinguished from the "common herd." Whatever is within the reach of all is relatively of little value. That is why diamond magnates are unhappy and are doing their utmost to induce the government of the South African Union to limit the production of diamonds by law. What these magnates regard as "disaster" has pursued them for some time. The first heavy blow was the discovery of diamonds in German Southwest Africa and the prompt production of one-fifth of the world's output, but strings were pulled and the new field was brought into the combine. Then the issues of the war brought the sacrifice sales of the diamonds of the Russian, Austrian and German aristocracy, which further depressed the market. And now, to make matters worse than ever from the viewpoint of the dealers, great new alluvial deposits have been discovered in South Africa, where, it appears, rich finds can be spaded out by mere individual effort.

The promise of new diamonds in too great plenty is the more appalling to the dealers because the old diamonds still exist and are virtually indestructible. But the bright stones are as beautiful as ever. The only difference is that if they become plentiful and cheap enough to be within the reach of just about everybody, they will no longer be adored. There's the difficulty—not one of actual deterioration but merely a matter of psychology on the part of a humanity desirous to be distinguished above its fellows.

"WHERE FREEDOM LIVES."

The future is a sealed book and no man can foresee the changes that may be accomplished by time. The fathers of this republic, the framers of the Federal Constitution, little dreamed of a time when a vast part of the American people would complain of the loss of liberty and point to the British empire — from which the American Colonies revolted in the name of human rights—as the place where the bird of freedom, deserting our own shores, now finds its congenial home. Yet this strange, unforeseen thing has come to pass. Under the caption, "Where Freedom Lives," the New York World, speaking the sentiment of millions of Americans, solemnly says:

> The outcome of the election in Ontario is a cruel reminder of how much liberty we have lost in the United States. There are about three million people in the province of Ontario, English-speaking like ourselves, living under much the same social circumstances. They voted in 1919, as we did, to try prohibition. They voted the other day, as we in New York, Illinois, Wisconsin did a month ago, to modify prohibition. But their will prevails, and ours does not. Their vote means a change in the law. Our vote is dismissed by the tyrannical organization which governs us as a fake, as treason, as disloyalty. The will of a majority among three million inhabitants is law in Canada. The will of a majority among ten million people in New York gets as much respect as if it were a protest from a conquered and inferior race.

Noting that the Canadians enjoy the democracy and self-government which we long boasted of but "have lost," the World insists that we have not now the self-government which our forefathers inaugurated and adds that the people of Canada "have had the sense, which we have lacked, not to sacrifice to a doubtful experiment their whole political liberty."

Adopting American "unwritten law", an English jury acquitted a husband who killed his wife's paramour. Thereupon the judge sentenced the slayer to twelve months with hard labor for "possessing firearms with intent to endanger life". Thus English law permitted a measure of mercy while refusing to allow itself to be ignored.

With an insurance company announcing that the hazards of regularly established and licensed commercial aviation are little greater than those faced by motorists or even those faced by pedestrians, it would seem to be time to conclude that flying is safer than most of us have supposed.

It's a long lane that has no turning. The announcement of a reaction against bobbed hair is followed by the news of a decided falling off in the production of automobiles (and of people saying "it is no longer safe to drive"). Perhaps by another year there will be fewer legs on exhibition up to the knees.

We read that certain university professors divided evenly on whether one should write "there is produced two-thirds" or "there are produced two-thirds," and yet it is not possible to make anything but a plural subject out of "two-thirds," which manifestly is the double of one-third.

That Body of Yours

YOUR APPETITE.

Perhaps you have wondered why your appetite is not good. You are at a loss to understand it because you select your food carefully, and eat only the foods that agree with you. Also you have been careful to spread your meals some hours apart, so that you felt that your system was in need of food by the time the meal hour arrived. Now you don't hear so much about calories any more, although they are really important, but you do hear about vitamins and our scientists are now telling us that one of these vitamins has a lot to do with arousing your appetite.

As you know, there is the vitamin A, fat soluble, found in eggs, fats of internal organs, in cod livers and milk. This is needed for growth and development.

Then there is vitamin C, found in oranges, lemons, green vegetables, tomatoes, spinach and lettuce, eggs and milk. This prevents scurvy. However it is vitamin B, found in seeds, green plants, fruits, potatoes, cabbage, spinach, carrots, that these research men tell us has much to do with giving you that hungry feeling. Why?

Well loss of appetite is due to a great extent to lack of motion on the part of the stomach. Its walls are made of muscle, as you know, and if this muscle lacks tone it doesn't churn the food around well, and throw it out of the stomach into the intestine.

These scientists admit that any rundown condition of the body, and of the whole muscular system would also cause a lack of tone in the muscle walls of the stomach, and loss of appetite.

However in advanced cases of deficiency in vitamin B, with loss of appetite and nervous and muscular symptoms, there was a rapid improvement in the muscular tone of the stomach by giving the foods containing vitamin B.

Now this business of counting the calories, or of figuring out whether or not you are getting sufficient vitamins with your food, can cause you so much thought and anxiety that you can really get more harm than good from it.

However if you are watching the other points mentioned and there is still a lack of appetite, it might be well to increase your intake of vitamins. Really an increase in vegetables and fruits with perhaps kidney and liver.

However most of us would be wise to use an all round diet daily.

The Joke Turned

A motorist touring in Ireland one day met a native who was driving a donkey. Thinking he would have a little fun at the man's expense, he said, "My friend, what is the difference between your turnout and mine?" "Oh, not a great dale," promptly replied the Irishman. "Shure the donkey's in the shafts in wan and on the mte in the other."

Today's Story in New York History

First Representative Assembly in the State Convened in New Amsterdam, December 10, 1653.

When Peter Stuyvesant arrived as Governor of New Netherland, May 11, 1647, he was received with great rejoicing by the inhabitants, and he marched to the fort in splendid style.

He addressed the people, but when he said, "I shall reign over you as a father governs his children," it is to be presumed that they did not fully comprehend the paternal nature of his future rule, as it lay in his mind. He began that rule with characteristic energy. Proclamations were issued against Sabbath desecration, intemperance and quarreling; intoxicating liquor was not to be sold to the Indians, and those who were guilty of this breach, were to be fined and to be held responsible for any damage the savage might inflict while under the influence of strong drink.

Stuyvesant was too frank and honest to conceal his opinions and intentions, and with despotic sentiments he began his iron rule. He defended Governor Kieft's conduct in rejecting interference, and plainly told the people: "If anyone during my administration shall appeal I will make him a foot shorter and send the pieces to Holland, and let him appeal in that way." While Stuyvesant was despotic, honesty and wisdom marked all his acts.

He applied himself to boundary disputes with New England and to the settlements of the Swedes on the Delaware River, and treated the surrounding Indians with the utmost kindness. Yet all was not smooth sailing for he was in financial straits, and the uncomfortable nature of his own position was of course increased by the fact that many of the colonists were English people.

Stuyvesant administered the government of New Netherland more than five years, continually making arbitrary efforts to repress the spirit of popular freedom, for which the inhabitants were clamoring. The soul of Stuyvesant was troubled by this "impudent intrusting of power with the people."

In February, 1653, New Amsterdam was formally organized as a city, and a building known as the City Tavern, a large stone structure erected by Governor Kieft for the entertainment of strangers, was named the State House or City Hall.

Another trouble vexed the soul of Stuyvesant, when great numbers of New England Puritans seeking escape from persecution came to New Netherland. They intermarried with the Dutch, and being free to act as citizens, they exercised much influence in public affairs. The more Stuyvesant attempted to stifle this republicanism, the more widely it spread.

November 26, 1653, a convention of nineteen delegates from eight villages assembled in the City Hall in New Amsterdam, ostensibly to secure themselves against depredations of Indians and pirates. Stuyvesant tried to control their actions but they paid very little attention to him. They held a banquet when they adjourned but he declined to attend. They told him there would be another convention soon.

This revolutionary movement aroused the ire of the Director-General, but he prudently yielded to the demands of the people and issued a call for another convention, and so gave legal sanction for the election of delegates thereto.

These were chosen and assembled in City Hall, December 10, 1653. The object of the convention was to prepare a true statement of public affairs in New Netherland, and a remonstrance against the tyrannous rule of the director-general. This was the first real representative assembly in the great State of New York.

The remonstrance was drawn up by George Baxter, Stuyvesant's former secretary, and signed by every delegate. Stuyvesant met it with his usual courage. He denied the right of some delegates to their seats; and he denounced the whole thing as the wicked work of the English. This bluster did not turn the convention from its purpose, and they threatened, if the governor refused to reply, to appeal to the States-General.

He ordered the members to disperse on pain of incurring his "high displeasure." "We derive our authority," he said, "from God and the company, not from a few ignorant subjects; and we alone can call the inhabitants together." The convention executed its threat, and appealed to the States-General.

While thus perplexed by domestic annoyances, the tranquillity of the Director-General's "foreign relations" was seriously disturbed. The English ships-of-war appeared before the city, and after holding out for a short time, Stuyvesant at last yielded to their demands and the city surrendered.

MIDNIGHT

The clock had just struck.

He Glanced Up

It was midnight. Christmas Eve had come and gone once more and now Christmas was here.

All was very still and quiet in the house. Now and again there was a sound but it was only the creak of an old, weary board in the floor, or of a murmur in the walls, usually so quiet and willing to be out of the way of people, though serving a very useful purpose just the same.

The fire had gone out long before. The rooms were so silent. Only if you had gone into some of the bedrooms you would have heard quiet, even breathing.

The clock had made more sound and noise than anything in the house with its striking twelve times to let any one who cared to know realize that Christmas had come.

Then there came some sounds, voices, sleigh bells, prancing.

And there were sounds in the chimney, sounds as exciting and interesting as they could be.

"Well, well, well," came a low, cheery voice.

Down the chimney, pack and all, came Santa Claus.

He glanced up at the clock.

There it was, just a few minutes after midnight. In fact it was only two minutes after midnight.

"I arrived just on Christmas," Santa said to himself. "Merry Christmas to every one in the household: This is the first Merry Christmas I've whispered as yet this year. For a few minutes ago when I was in the house next door it was not quite Christmas.

"Now it's Christmas morning. Ah, how they've greeted me here!

"Such beautiful decorations. Wreaths with red bows in the windows, greens and branches over the pictures, red candles in the candlesticks, even some wreaths with little cones and bunches of red berries.

"Then I do admire the red bells that are hanging about in different places, and there seems to be so much care and thought about the decorations.

"I like to see all the cards on the mantlepiece, and the bits of red ribbon around.

"There are twigs from pine trees in vases and floor pots which look as though the pine woods had come to the house.

"But I must get to work."

So Santa unpacked and put the presents around. There were so many, many presents, and Santa worked with all the quickness and speed with which Santa can work.

And as he left and looked about the cheery, Christmasy room and peeked out into the hall with its Christmas trimmings, too, he said half-aloud to himself:

"Merry Christmas, cheery household!"

Santa Unpacked.

He left then, but the old clock on the mantelpiece, with the Christmas cards all around, went on ticking, ticking, ticking, but the clock said nothing about Christmas for it knew that it had given its share when it had struck the hour that made it Christmas morning.

One, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten, eleven, twelve.

The clock had helped to make it Christmas when it had struck the hour of midnight!

Just Begun on Girls

The day of Baby Sister's arrival, grandpa took my five-year-old cousin, Billy, to his club for lunch.

On being introduced to Billy, one of grandpa's friends asked: "Are you an only child?"

"Oh, no," said Billy, "I have four brothers and one sister."

"What!" exclaimed the old gentleman, "Five boys and only one girl."

"Well, sir," replied Bill, defensively, "you see, we've only just begun on girls."

Just a Sample

Most of little Beth's neighbors have large families and Beth herself is well supplied with brothers and sisters. After returning from a visit to her aunt, who had been married only a short time, Beth was asked how many children her auntie had. "Only one," she answered quickly. "All God's sent her yet is a sample."

WHEN I WAS TWENTY-ONE

BY JOSEPH KAYE

At 21—Alfred C. Gilbert, Inventor of Structural Toy, Paid Way Through Yale Literally by Magic.

"AT TWENTY-ONE I entered Yale, paying my way in with savings from my earnings as a flagman on the Northern Pacific.

"During the first few months at college I paid my expenses by waiting on the table and taking care of the furnaces. Then I earned enough to carry me through by giving entertainments of magical tricks, which I had taught myself early in life.

"The first money I made that way while at Yale was five dollars, the remuneration for entertaining at a children's party.—Alfred C. Gilbert."

TODAY—Mr. Gilbert is the inventor and manufacturer of the most popular boy's toy that has been devised, a toy consisting of metal cross-pieces which the boy can build into structures of various kinds. It is said to be the biggest selling toy for boys today, and has become a standard children's plaything. Mr. Gilbert got the idea for this toy while he was passing by a signal tower, built of steel beams.

From Yale Mr. Gilbert graduated as a doctor; he substituted the devising and manufacturing of accessories for professional magicians, stage magic being his first love, and dating from the day, when he was eleven, when he received a set of magical tricks for magazine subscriptions.

Kamp Paintings On Exhibition

An unusual exhibition of paintings in an unusual place is the art exhibit of Mrs. Louise M. Kamp now on view in this city.

The showroom of the Broadway Garage has been transformed into an art gallery for the time being and here some two hundred oil paintings are hung in a splendid light with a fine regard to values.

This exhibition is open to the public. There is no admission fee.

Mrs. Kamp's work is well known in Kingston and her paintings hang in some of the best houses where art is appreciated.

The artist is best known for her forest pictures, some of her autumn woods being unforgettable in coloring and in depth. A critic once said of her that her trees "never look as though painted on canvas but seem to grow out of the ground."

Perhaps the most striking picture in the present exhibition is the large "Winter Forest" with the great trees standing in the sunlight amid unbroken snow. This work is a masterpiece.

Mrs. Kamp has a great knack for small pictures. She can put a landscape on a tiny canvas and give the effect of a wide sweep of hillside or a long road winding into the distance with almost uncanny skill.

It will be a treat to any art lovers to visit this exhibition and see these lovely pictures which will be on view every afternoon this week and next at 708 Broadway.

DRY BROOK.

Dry Brook, Dec. 9.—Lavelle Tait of Bell Ayre was a business caller in this place the early part of the week.

M. Foytik returned from New York city where he has been spending a few weeks.

Mr. Redmond of Arkville and a Mr. Smith from Wisconsin were business callers at Fern Crest Fox Ranch Monday.

Dr. R. E. Smith was called to Will Avery's the early part of the week.

Archie Fairbairn has moved into Nelb Graham's house for the winter.

Mr. and Mrs. Myron Todd are planning to move to Basil Todd's cottage for winter months.

Gus Stewart purchased a house of Cyrus George to use for fox feed.

Work on the road was stopped very abruptly by the recent snow storm.

DREAMLAND FARM GUESTS TO HOLD NEW YORK REUNION.

On Friday night, December 17, in the grand ballroom of the Hotel McAlpin, Dreamland Farm, the vacation resort in Kyserike, New York, will be brought back to the minds of its many guests by their attendance at the annual New York reunion.

It is expected that about four hundred persons will appear at the dance and entertainment. The affair is being managed by a committee of guests of Dreamland Farm, and a lively time is expected.

The entertainment to be furnished includes numbers by Roger Bower and Norma Pierce, well known radio announcers; Frank Forshaw, Frank Annunziata and Henry Hudson, a specialty dancer. There will be a peppy Nantucket to start the affair, and an election of a Dreamland King and Queen to complete the evening's fun.

The dance music will be furnished by Harry Eaton's Club Arcady Orchestra.

The function will be broadcast by Station WMCA between 11 and 12 o'clock, and friends of Dreamland Farm in Ulster county will be in touch with many friends if they "listen in".

NOAH BEERY

Noah Beery, the "movie" star, was born on a farm in Missouri. His first stage experience was with a stock company. He has been in pictures for the last ten years. He is a splendid character actor and among some of his successes are the following: "Wanderer of the Wasteland," "The Fighting Coward," "North of 36," "Contraband," "The Spaniard," "Light of Western Stars," "Wild Horse Mesa," "Lord Jim," and "The Vanishing Race."

The Hotel Stenographer

By Roe Fulkerson

"HOW I could love him!" the Hotel Stenographer clasped her hands ecstatically.

"Huh," said the House Detective, looking after the departing man. "You have a big heart to love all the men you say you love."

"Kelly," answered the girl impressively, "I have never seen a woman's heart, but I know it is much like the toy balloons they sell the kids on the corner near the park.

"A balloon is a mighty wrinkly, flabby, unbeautiful thing until you blow it up. With even a little wind a balloon is round and pretty. With some more of the same it gets rounder and prettier. There is almost no limit to the amount of air it will take and it grows sleeker and rounder and the colors more beautiful as it gets full.

"That's the way with a woman's heart, Kelly. It begins to develop with her first lover and each succeeding lover only rounds it out and makes it more beautiful and its owner along with it. Like the toy balloon there is almost no limit to the amount of love a woman's heart can take.

"You know Kelly, there is only one place through which they can put anything into those little balloons. A woman's heart is like that, Kelly. What gets into her heart must be put into her ear. Beauty in men, money in their pockets, motor cars under their feet are attractive to a woman, but the man with the line of chatter is the chap who walks away with the balloon bobbing on the end of his string.

"There is nothing like hot air to fill a balloon and make it soar. There is nothing like hot air to inflate a woman's heart. That bird who just flitted by had a line that would charm a baby elephant away from its mother."

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

"DEAD SEA FRUIT"

FREQUENTLY we hear the expression, "dead sea fruit," with reference to a disappointment or disillusionment, something which, though it may have had an attractive exterior, turns out to be rotten inside.

On the face of it, of course, "dead sea fruit" would seem to be a paradoxical term. The Dead sea, which is involved in the reference, is a lake in Palestine which forms part of one of the deepest chasms of the earth's surface, being 1,292 feet below the level of the sea. Its shores are abrupt and precipitous, the formation being limestone and sandstone.

There is no life in the Dead sea and sea fish die when placed in its waters. Its desolation and sterility are traditional. Hence the expression, "dead sea fruit," for something which yields nothing would in itself be easily comprehensible. However, we have a still more definite and direct source for the origin of the expression. It is found in the "dead apple" of antiquity that was supposed to grow around the Dead sea. It was described in ancient literature as beautiful to the eye but when tasted turning only to bitterness.

Bundles of Warm Clothing Needed

Recently a number of people in this city who have been actively interested in Near East Relief work have received word of the frightful suffering in the refugee camps at Beirut, Syria, where there are thousands of suffering women and children. In Beirut it is just as cold and stormy as it was in Kingston last Sunday, and in a very short time these destitute people will be in the midst of the rainy season which will add a hundred-fold to their suffering. While during the recent cold snap, there were probably many homes in Kingston where the thermometer did not register 70 degrees, there doubtless were practically no homes where added clothing worn temporarily could not make the inmates quite comfortable.

Some families have already sent bundles of warm clothing and bedding to the Near East sufferers, and one such family has asked The Freeman to tell others about the need, hoping that several other bundles will be promptly sent in the hope of reaching their destination before the rainy season sets in to add to the misery of the cold.

There is no red tape to this giving. All that is necessary is to gather together clean warm articles of women's and children's clothing, especially for babies and small children, bedding, etc., do them up in a well wrapped and tied up bundle, and send them at once by parcel post to:

Musical Genius Gave Piano to the World

Johann Sebastian Bach, one of the greatest of musical geniuses, was at one time a piano tuner, and it was through his efforts that music reached its present range, a writer in the Kansas City Star informs us. Before Bach's time musicians had only a limited number of keys in which to write music, as they could not time their instruments to other keys, and as a result all music written prior to 1700 is very much alike in tune. Bach labored ceaselessly on the harpsichord, forerunner of the piano, until he discovered the lost notes hidden in the strings. Then he began to write music in keys hitherto unknown to his compatriots. At first they did not take kindly to his variations of chords and intermixing of many strange sounds and called him a musical fanatic. Later, however, Mozart, upon hearing one of Bach's pieces, exclaimed: "Thank Heaven: here at last is something new that I can learn from." Then followed such great masters as Chopin, Schumann, Liszt and Rubenstein who adored and played Bach.

Home Town Boy Did Not Forget

Library, Free From All Encumbrance, Gift to Livonia, N. Y., of Swiss Dentist Who Was Born There Many Years Ago.

Livonia, N Y, Dec 10 (AP)—A boy's love for his parents and for his "own home town", living on through the years and carrying him in recollection back across the seas, will soon be given concrete evidence in Livonia with the completion of a new library building.

The $20,000 structure, the first real library the town ever has had, is the gift of Dr. Thurlow G Patterson, a practicing dentist of Geneva, Switzerland, who was born in Livonia and spent his boyhood years here The building is designed as a memorial to Dr. Patterson's parents, the late James and Laura A Patterson, but there is a belief here it will be also a memorial to the 'home town boy who did not forget"

Not only did Dr Patterson give the library, but he has engaged the architects, provided all funds and will turn over to the town upon completion of the structure, a building free from all financial encumbrance

It is probably nearly 50 years since Dr Patterson left Livonia He went to Syracuse, later entered dental school and upon graduation went with a brother to the Swiss city to take up practice Upon his brother's retirement some years ago Dr. Patterson continued in the profession.

In Touch With Old Town.

Friends kept him in touch with the "news from Livornia", and when some time ago he heard of the efforts of the townspeople to establish a modern library, he decided to aid. In 1917 several local residents started a public library on a small scale in one of the rooms of a private home It was supported by voluntary contribution, and interest in it increased until larger quarters were deemed necessary. In 1920 the old Hoyt property was acquired for the use of the library, the money being raised by local contributions, and with the larger effort well under way, an appropriation was obtained from the village, and another of $500 a year for five years from the town Two years ago the laws were changed so that recently the appropriation has been a certain percentage of the assessed valuation of town property.

The number of volumes in the library has grown to more than 4,500 for adults and 1,500 for children, and a part-time librarian is employed in connection with the school Previously, interested residents, especially the women gave of their time and abilities to the library, tending the desk, cataloging and repairing books and doing the other innumerable things necessary to the upkeep of such an institution.

Citizens' Work Rewarded.

Their efforts were rewarded, however, when the home town paper the Livonia Gazette, published this communication from Dr Patterson

"To the Citizens of the town of Livonia

"It is some years since my interest was aroused by the first splendid attempt to establish a small public library in your town, which is, in a deep sense, my town also My father and mother were for many years residents there; there I was born and there passed the best of my boyhood. To this day my feeling for it remains the feeling of a graduate for his Alma Mater.

"Consequently it was with much sympathy that I watched the attempt's success and the subsequent excellent work of the library itself; of its growth and development my old friend, the late Fitch M. Davis, kept me always informed Now his enthusiasm—though he passed away—has combined with the institution's continued usefulness and my own affection for Livonia to prompt me to the following decision·

"In memory of my father and mother, the late James and Laura A. Patterson, I offer to construct on your present library site, and then turn over to you, entirely at my own expense and free from all financial encumbrance, a suitable brick structure, designed as a modern library building and large enough to meet all probable future demands.

"The architects engaged are a well-known Buffalo firm, one of the members of which is a friend of mine of long standing, and all of whom express complete confidence that the building will be a credit to the community. Therefore, if you decide to accept this gladly-offered gift, as soon as the trustees approve the plans, they may negotiate a disposal of the frame building now standing and, when that disposal has been accomplished, the consideration of the specifications can be called for and work on the new structure may begin immediately."

Within a week the trustees had accepted the offer and soon thereafter work on the new library building was begun. Plans call for its completion by April 1, 1927. It will cost $20,000.

Wild Holds Its Own

The persistence of the wild life close to the haunts of man and his works is more than remarkable. When man first intruded into the wilderness places wild animals were his easy prey. They did not know anything about him and probably looked upon him only as some fellow animal who had come to share their lot. They were disillusioned fast enough and they learned quick lessons from disillusionment.

Today wild animals know how to care for themselves. For years their ranks rapidly decreased, but when man believed that the vanishing point almost had been reached there were soon signs of increase. All the animals had become "foxy."

Pathos in Survival of Colonial Remnant

About a half acre of colonial New York survives on the west bank of the Harlem river, just north of the University Heights bridge that connects West Fordham road with West Two Hundred and Seventh street. A long, low house covers a goodly portion of this plot that smacks so obviously of a more roomy past. The dwelling droops wearily as if under its staggering weight of years. It was erected when the Harlem was a picturesque stream with some pretense to scenic attractions.

The loneliness of this colonial survival is emphasized by the present commercial and industrial character of the locality as a whole. The river is lined at this point by brickyards, coal pockets and other similar effects not connected with exclusive society. The trim little craft that can be pictured as once pausing at the landing below the house have been supplanted by squat scows, riding low beneath the burdens of rugged merchandise they ferry to and from the yards. The silence of the section, that was once broken only by the natural notes of birds and insects, is now shattered by the snorts of straining tugboats and the clamorous horns of motor cars.—New York Times.

Hibiscus Is Never Blue

In many of the pink hibiscus the eye is crimson while the various shades are faded, at times, into the merest pink tinge in an almost white flower, says Nature Magazine. Often there is more or less of the pure scarlet color, and then there is the dilution—the scarlet pink. There are all mixtures of crimson and scarlet combined in various forms with a tinge of yellow or orange. No blue has been found.

Erect Tablet For Lyric Poet

Bluff Point, N. Y., Dec. 10 (AP)—A tablet to mark the birthplace of Coates Kinney, poet, soldier, attorney, journalist,, and school teacher, who was born 100 years ago at the hamlet known as Kinney's Corners is to be erected at the little crossroads settlement near her by Gu-ya-no-ga chapter, Daughters of the American Revoution of Penn Yan.

The centennial of Kinney's birth fell on November 28 last, and passed virtually unnoticed except perhaps by a few old inhabitants who remember him as the author of "Rain on the Roof," a lyric set to music and widely popular sixty years ago.

Stephen Kinney, the poet's grandfather, came with his son Giles to the Lake Keuka region from Connecticut about 1815 and settled at the intersection of the highways that now lead to Bluff Point, Keuka College, Branchport and Penn Yan. The elder Kinney, a veteran of the Revolution, later took part of his family to Ohio, but Giles remained in New York until Coates, one of his 14 children, was 12 years old and then he, too, moved west. Coates was educated at Antioch College and then studied law. For two years he was a state senator in Ohio and later worked for newspapers at Dayton and Springfield, O.

In the Civil war Coates won distinction as paymaster for the Union Army, with the rank of major. One of the outstanding accomplishments of his military career was the shipment of $2,000,000 in gold from New York city to Cairo, Ill., for the pay of Union Troops. Warned that such an enterprise involved great risk he packed the coin into nail kegs and it reached its destination safely in freight cars.

After his return to civil life, Coates Kinney was at the head of several schools in Ohio, but the later years of his life were devoted mainly to literature, his "Keuka and Other Poems" and "Lyrics of the Ideal and Real" were published in book form many years after "Rain on the Roof" became popular. This song, almost forgotton now, had its days in public favor, and many whose memory goes back three score years will recall it. The first verse was:

When the humid shadows hover
  Over all the starry spheres,
And the melancholy darkness
  Gently weeps in rainy tears,
What a bliss to press the pillow
  Of a cottage-chamber bed,
And listen to the patter
  Of the soft rain overhead.

Kinney died in Ohio in 1904 at the age of 78. Many of his kinsmen still live in Yates county. Among them are: Mrs. Jane Wood, Mrs. Charles Fitzwater, Mrs. Elizabeth Vreeland, Miss Elizabeth Fox, William D. Fox, John Fox and descendants of the late George R. Cornwell, a relative of Myrca Cornwell, Kinney's mother.

Making Artificial Ice

It is said the first commercial factory for making ice was established in New Orleans in 1866. The process was not wholly satisfactory and in 1870 there were only three other plants in operation. Later improvements resulted in a rapid growth of the business.

Agriculture Is On Upward Grade

But Farmers Cannot Do Everything, Says Secretary Jardine, and the Industry Is Entitled to Assistance from Other Groups and from Nation.

Washington, Dec. 10 (AP).—Agriculture is unquestionably on the upward grade, as a result in a large measure of the intelligence, energy, and determination of the farmers themselves, Secretary Jardine said Thursday in his annual report.

Everything necessary for reconstruction on a sound footing cannot be done by the farmers themselves though, Mr. Jardine declared, and the industry is entitled to assistance from other groups of the community and from the nation. He advanced no new plan for farm relief.

Improvement In Past Year.

"Further moderate improvement in the agricultural situation as a whole has taken place during the last year," said the secretary. "Certain regions have suffered reverses, notably the cotton states, whose principal crop, produced in exceptional abundance, is selling at very low prices. Parts of the spring wheat states have harvested a poor crop. Generally speaking, however, the position of agriculture is better now than it has been in any year since 1920. Livestock raisers, dairymen, and winter-wheat growers have earned good returns and underlying conditions in the Corn Belt have improved. Since the depression period of 1920-21 every agricultural section of the country and every branch of agriculture have made progress. Unfortunately, the recent slump in cotton prices makes it doubtful whether the crop year of 1926-27 will carry forward the story of improvement at the rate established in the last few years. It is also true that over much of the country farmers are still struggling with a burden of debt and reduced buying power.

"Farmers are getting results from the steps they took, following the depression of 1921, to curtail overproduction and to bring their leading enterprises into profitable balance. Last year, however, it became apparent that in most lines (cotten being an outstanding exception) practicable readjustments in production had largely been made."

Meeting the Surplus Problem.

Turning to the surplus problem Mr. Jardine said he was convinced that through organized and well-directed efforts much more can be done than had hitherto been done to eliminate the recurring surpluses that prove so detrimental to the farming industry. Better control of the movement of agricultural products into consumptive channels is needed through adequate marketing, storage, and credit facilities, and organization of producers for marketing operations. Farmer-controlled agencies, he believed, could best effect an orderly flow of products to market.

"Legislative action should be designed to create and enlarge such agencies and supplement their efforts," said Secretary Jardine. "No general formula will cover all commodities and all regions. What is needed is concentrated and coordinated effort backed up by adequate resources. To do this may require further enabling legislation."

Need Freight Rate Readjustments.

Declaring that farm commodity prices, especially in areas distant from markets, are seriously depressed by high freight rates, Mr. Jardine said it was his conviction there must be substantial rate readjustments.

Drastic reduction in farm taxes cannot be expected at the present time, in the opinion of the secretary, who said the demands of the users of automobiles for better and more improved roads and the necessarily high costs of education will keep the expenses of states and local units close to their present level. He said it was a mistake to suppose that the tariff system benefits industry greatly and agriculture little.

Tariff Attack Unwise.

"It would be in the highest degree unwise for farmers at this time to launch an attack on the tariff," he said, "without carefully considering the possibility that in the near future they may need it more than any other economic group in the country. Tariff duties on farm products prior to the war were largely hypothetical. Now, with increasing population with relatively declining farm population, with declining farm acreage per capita, and with increasing efficiency of farming, the tariff is becoming protective for crops formerly influenced mainly by the world market. Powerful forces are carrying us into a position in which the tariff will have its intended effect in the near future on a steadily lengthening list of important farm commodities. Under our high-tariff regime, such tariff rates should be placed on farm products, article by article, as will insure the producer the home market. The experience of recent years have convinced me that the system of basing tariff rates on differences in production costs is inapplicable to agricultural products. The only method is to do what used to be done decades ago for manufacturing industries, namely, to fix rates at such a height as effectively to give the home market to domestic producers."

PLEDGES TO PAY FATHER'S LOSSES

Husband Murdered, Sire Is Fugitive From Justice.

Boonville Mo.—Her husband slain, her father a fugitive from justice Mrs. Mary Turner, twenty eight year-old mother of three small children, has taken upon herself the task of restoring to scores of creditors the small fortunes they lost in what the law brands a gigantic swindle in this town. Mrs Turner's father is sought on charges of perpetrating the swindle An angry victim of the burst bubble is in jail for murdering her husband

Charles W Nixon, the father, left town shortly before a lead mine and real estate scheme smashed, with liabilities running into hundreds of thousands of dollars. Then a grand jury began investigating the case, and Emil B Turner, son-in-law of Nixon, undertook the task of placating the angry investors.

Turner was doing a good job of it, folks in Boonville generally agreed. No one connected him with the burst bubble either Then Cecil Cockrill, whose life savings were swept away, came to town A few hours later Turner was shot to death and Cockrill was arrested for his murder

Now Mrs Turner, bearing the double burden of her father's disappearance and her husband's death, has undertaken to right the name of her family The family owns some valuable real estate which she probably will sell to make good the losses

"Every penny will be paid, I firmly believe,' she asserts with a faint smile "Every creditor will get his just dues."

Span Breaks, 80 Miss Death—All Monkeys

Milwaukee Wis.—Only their natural agility saved 80 residents of Monkey Island, Milwaukee zoo, from almost certain death when their wire bridge connecting the tops of two tall trees on the island fell to the ground while the entire population of the island was holding an indignation meeting on the bridge.

The cause for the meeting was the sudden appearance of a keeper who sought to kidnap one of the leading members of the community As soon as the invader set foot on the island, an alarm was sounded. Flea hunts and peanut chases were forgotten Mothers gathered their children and dashed madly for safety.

When the entire flock had reached the bridge in safety the meeting got under way One by one the older monkeys took turns haranguing their fellows and shouting imprecations down on the head of the keeper.

Suddenly the tallest tree planted on the top of the hill in which the community cave apartment is located, fell with a crash

With the first warning lurch, the shouting stopped. With feet and tails the monks clung to the thin wire strands with the desperation of drowning men.

Down they went with the bridge Then just when it seemed as though they would surely be dashed to death on the jagged rocks that crown the hill, they jumped.

There was no pushing, no confusion, all 80 jumped from the bridge as at a given signal Not one suffered as much as a sprained paw.

Baby Born With Bared Heart Lives 17 Hours

New York.—While physicians and surgeons hung intently over a bed in St. Catherine's hospital, Brooklyn, a seventeen-hour-old baby, abnormal and doomed to die, stopped breathing

For hours the specialists at the bedside had watched the rhythmic pulsing of the child's ectopic heart, for the baby, one of twin girls, had been born with her heart and connecting arteries and veins outside her body, yet functioning normally. Imperfect formation of chest bones in prenatal existence, surgeons said, had forced the heart and its surrounding organs into the open.

At 9:30 a. m. the child stopped breathing. Medical and surgical authorities, their skill unable to put the displaced organ in its proper place because of the weakness of the child's body structure, gazed intently at the heart beating regularly in front of them. For an hour its rhythmic contractions continued. Suddenly it stopped. Then Dr. Charles A. Gordon injected adrenalin, a powerful stimulant, into the stilled organ.

Slowly at first, and then more powerfully, the heart resumed its beating for five minutes more, although all breathing had stopped an hour and a quarter before.

Fights Sliding Sand Half Hour, Saves Pal

New York.—Benjamin Langford was working on top of a 100-foot sand pile when he suddenly saw William Reinelt, a fellow workman, being carried by a sand slide to the foot of the pile and buried up to his eyes.

With a shout Langford leaped into the artificial pit. Himself buried to the waist, he fought the steady stream of descending sand with his bare hands.

For a half hour the elemental struggle went on. Then a fire rescue squad arrived, together with police of the Coney Island station. A temporary scaffolding was erected and Langford told to grab a rope lowered to him. He fastened the rope first to Reinelt and refused to leave the pit until he saw him hoisted to safety.

THE BOND OF BIRTH

By H. M. EGBERT

(Copyright by W G Chapman)

IN THE new settlement of Grey, which is the first town that white men have built north of the Zambesi, men passed Dawson and felt ashamed of their color.

"Who is that man" inquired Lady Sibil Forrest who had newly arrived at Grey, where her father was administrator from London.

"That? Oh, that's Dawson," answered her escort a young officer in the mounted police "Not a very savory subject, Lady Sibil. He—"

Dawson, lolling in the sun, sat up and felt his cheeks glow red for the first time in three years. The young officer did not tell Lady Sibil all, but what he told her was enough, for the next time she passed Dawson she looked across the street and hurried by

"The worst of it is, the rotter used to be a gentleman," said Bennett, the young officer to a friend that evening at the club "Of course, I couldn't tell Lady Sibil all—not half. But when a white man so far degrades himself as to live in a kraal with savages—"

"The fellow ought to be kicked out of Grey,' answered the other.

Dawson had come north with the best intentions in the world, but he was constitutionally incapable of making a living, and when reduced to poverty he blamed his own people He wandered up and down the land, without the money to take him home or even to a more decent section. Degraded, ragged, he was turned from all doors Propriety is perhaps strongest in all frontier settlements, in spite of the yarns men spin

Then it was that he had frankly abandoned civilized life and gone to the natives. He had always had an influence over them; they were proud of having a white man among them, and in a short time Dawson found himself a figure of respect among them

And, strangely enough, Dawson cut a very respectable figure squatting round a fire with a half dozen savage auditors, whereas he slunk like a dog through the streets of Grey.

Yet the shame and humiliation rankled However much a man may think he can go back on his own people, he is one of them for the remainder of his life. And so it came to pass that the glance, scornful and high, of the white girl burned in his soul.

"The fellow ought to be kicked out of Grey," one man had said of him, and the other answered.

"They wouldn't have him anywhere in the world."

Dawson knew that this was the current opinion of him. Often he planned to escape, to go somewhere where he could start life anew. But he knew that his memories would be with him forever. Nowhere in the world was there a place for him

The rumors of native unrest accentuated that winter. Dawson, seated round the fire, had discussed the matter with a dozen of the chiefs. All agreed that the projected uprising was madness. They knew the terrible power of the white man's guns.

"But what can we do?" they said. "Our young men want to flesh their spears, then—"

Dawson knew that the "then" had come when he found that the animated conversation of the natives would cease abruptly as he appeared. He knew that they mistrusted him, because even the savage knows that white is white and black is black forever.

He walked into Grey to warn the administrator. He was kept waiting by Lord Forrest for two hours, and then Lord Forrest sent out word that he was too busy to receive him.

But, when Dawson was waiting, he heard a scornful speech in the drawing room which opened from the hall.

"I wish the man would go," said the girl's voice. "I don't want to pass him, and I want to go out."

It was shortly after this that Dawson was sent away. He went back to the kraal. And there he gathered that the uprising was to take place within forty-eight hours.

The natives planned to rush the little settlement, twelve miles away, at dawn. It would be one of those massacres so familiar to African history. A rush of men, the wielding of the terrible stabbing spear—and Grey would be a thing of the past. Swift death for the men—for the women a worse fate.

Dawson knew all this through a confidant, and his heart, hot within him, approved. If Grey were obliterated, and its three hundred souls sent into eternity, there would be no more sneering faces to greet him when he walked into the town. And the woman who wouldn't pass him, wouldn't even walk under the same sun with him—he pictured her in the power of the savage warriors.

He had become so embittered that his mind was twisted, and he saw all this in the light of the natives. He justified it. On the night before the massacre was scheduled to occur he lay down in his kraal. He knew that the natives were suspicious of him, were watching him. He would show them how unfounded their suspicions were.

He slept, and awakened suddenly toward morning. In his sleep a sane vision had come to him. He saw things in a different perspective, now, himself in all his baseness, and Lady Sibil a prey to the savages.

Outside his hut a party of young men were keeping watch, armed with spears.

The night was very dark. Dawson crawled noiselessly from where he lay and wriggled out of the hut door. He had to pass within a dozen feet of the camp fire. But he was skilled in native craft.

"Listen, brother!" said one of the young men by the fire. "What is that sound?"

"A snake," answered the other, flinging his spear in that direction.

Once beyond the range of hearing, Dawson rose to his feet and ran noiselessly along the trail which led toward Grey. He knew that within a very few moments his absence would be discovered; but he must carry out his purpose now. He ran, hiding against the light of the rising moon, a shadow among the shadows of the trees.

At the place where the trail joined the high road he came suddenly upon a native picket. The two men were standing together, whispering. Dawson leaped at them and bore them to the ground. He ran. He heard two spears whiz past his head and the hoarse cries of the savages to their compatriots. But Dawson had been a famous sprinter in his college days and now, untrained though he was, the old instinct awoke in him. He outdistanced the picket.

He heard the hollow sound of tapping as he ran on, and knew that the natives were sounding hollow trees to warn those in front of him. He ran with pumping lungs and bursting heart, until he saw Grey, a shadow on the horizon against the misty dawn.

Two miles—and the attack might begin at any moment now. He quickened his speed. A group of armed warriors burst out from among the trees. They flung their spears, but missed him. He was almost invisible among the reeds of the dried river bed, and he ran. He heard their steps die in the distance. And Grey was still safe.

A mile, and it was growing light. The savages must be around the town, waiting for the signal to charge. He stopped. A cluster of shadows against the sky resolved itself into one wing of the savage army, drawn up in battle array.

He knew that they would wait several minutes while the witch doctor gave them "medicine" to make them invulnerable against the white man's bullets. He worked his way round among the reeds. He had got fifty yards in front of them before he heard the rustling of their shields, and he knew that Grey had still ten minutes of grace.

He was in Grey now. He passed like a shadow between the outlying houses, running along the highway until he reached the administrator's house, next to the police camp. He beat a loud tattoo upon the doors.

"Turn out!" he screamed. "Turn out all men! The natives are attacking Grey!"

It needed but a moment before the alarm took effect. The sentries, the guard came running to the gates. Dawson shouted to them with all his failing strength of voice, pointing down the main road. They understood.

The soldiers and citizens swarmed out of their houses at the ringing of the alarm bell. Hastily dressed, they had their rifles in readiness. Presently Dawson began to hear the rattle of the distant Maxims, the shouts of the charging savages, the roar of battle.

Then, long after, he opened his eyes. A doctor was bending over him. "No chance," he read in his eyes.

"Where did you get that spear wound, Dawson?" asked the doctor.

"Before I started," Dawson answered weakly.

The spear cast at the snake had pierced the body almost through. Dawson had run ten miles where many men would have dropped [illegible].

Before his glazing eyes there came another vision—a girl who leaned over him, sobbing, and watching his face.

"Live for my sake," she pleaded. "Grey cannot spare you—the best and bravest man in Grey."

And Dawson's eyes defiantly gave the lie to the doctor's.

EACH DAY SET A TASK

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

EACH day to set yourself a task,
And finish it—my boy, men tell
A thousand separate ways to ask
Success or fame—new ways they sell,
New ways they teach—but, old or new,
There is no other way to do.

Each day to dream yourself a dream,
And then to make the dream a fact—
Well, men may loiter, men may scheme,
But who would dream must also act,
Or all that life will ever bring
Is but the shadow of the thing.

Each day to set yourself a goal
And then to never turn aside,
Yea, not desert your dreaming soul
Until your soul is satisfied—
Well, men may loiter, men may
Who won in any other way.

Each day to aim a bit more high,
Each day to gaze a bit more far,
For what you wish to be to try,
And never quit until you are—
Ah, there's the secret—never quit!
Select a task, but finish it!

"For some seasons previous I had been playing in stock companies. I was playing at Elitch's Garden, in Denver, when Mr. Thomas, who happened to be in Denver overnight, came to our performance. ALL GOOD THINGS TO ALL HUMANITY

Beautiful Will Over Which No Lawyers Fought.

Perhaps the sanest and most beautiful will ever written was the production of a lunatic. At least the writer of it—one Charles Lounsberry, a member of the Illinois bar—died in an asylum, but how much more admirable was his will than some of the embittered testaments of men customarily sane the reader shall judge for himself. Here it is:

"I, Charles Lounsberry, being of sound and disposing mind and memory, do hereby make and publish this my last will and testament, in order, as justly as may be, to distribute my interest in the world among succeeding men.

"That part of my interest which is known in law and recognized in the sheep-bound volumes as my property, being inconsiderable and of no account, I make no disposition of in this my will.

"My right to live, being but a life estate, is not at my disposal, but, these things excepted, all else in the world I now proceed to devise and bequeath.

"Item. I leave to children inclusively, but only for the term of their childhood, all and every, the flowers of the fields, and the blossoms of the woods, with the right to play among them freely, according to the customs of children, warning them at the same time against thistles and thorns. And I devise to children the banks of the brooks, and the golden sand beneath the waters thereof, and the odors of the willows that dip therein, and the white clouds that float high over the giant trees. And I leave to children the long, long days to be merry in in a thousand ways, and the night and the moon, and the train of the Milky way to wonder at, but subject, nevertheless, to the rights hereinafter given to lovers.

"Item. I devise to boys, jointly, all the useful idle fields and commons where ball may be played; all pleasant waters where one may swim; all snow-clad hills where one may coast; and all streams and ponds where one may fish, or where, when grim winter comes, one may skate, to have and to hold these same for the period of their boyhood. And all meadows with the clover and butterflies thereof, the woods with their appurtenances, the squirrels and the birds and echoes and strange noises, and all distant places which may be visited, together with the adventures there found. And I give to said boys each his own place at the fireside at night, with all the pictures that may be seen in the burning wood, to enjoy without let or hindrance, and without any encumbrance or care.

"Item. To lovers I devise their imaginary world, with whatever they may need, as the stars of the sky, the red roses by the wall, the bloom of the hawthorn, the sweet strains of music, and aught else they may desire to figure to each other the lastingness and beauty of their love.

"Item. To young men jointly I devise and bequeath all boisterous, inspiring sports of rivalry, and I give to them the disdain of weakness and undaunted confidence in their own strength. Though they are rude, I leave to them the power to make lasting friendships, and of possessing companions, and to them exclusively I give all merry songs and brave choruses to sing with lusty voices.

"Item. And to those who are no longer children, or youths, or lovers, I leave memory, and I bequeath to them the volume of the poems of Burns and Shakespeare, and of other poets if there be others, to the end that they may live the old days over again, freely and fully, and without tithe or diminution.

"Item. To our loved ones with snowy crowns I bequeath the happiness of old age, the love and gratitude of their children until they fall asleep."

This has been described enthusiastically as the most beautiful and comprehensive will ever made—one under which all humanity is beneficiary, and which disposes of all the wealth in the world that is worth having.—Montreal Family Herald.

Roman Holiday

A talkative child was disturbing the audience in a movie theater while the screen was showing a photoplay based on the burning of Rome.

"He is playing the fiddle."

"What is that burning in the park?"

"Hush, dear; those are martyrs."

There was silence for a few moments; then the youngster created a small-sized commotion when she inquired vociferously:

"Mamma, are all martyrs inflammable?"—Youngstown Telegram.

HI-Y CLUB ADDRESSED BY HARRY H. FLEMMING.

The Hi-Y Club held their weekly meeting at the Y. M. C. A. on Wednesday and the publishing of a Hi-Y paper was discussed. John Watts, Tufick Maroon and Mr. Cocks, of the high school, were selected to discuss the subject and investigate as to whether or not it would be possible, and to report at the next meeting.

The club was addressed by Harry H. Flemming, president of the board of education, who spoke on the preparation for life in business. "A firm foundation," said the speaker, "is the first essential," and he urged the members of the club to make the most of their opportunities in order to gain knowledge to build on.

The address was thoroughly enjoyed by the boys and they expressed their desire to have Mr. Flemming speak to them again in the near future.

"I'll take it up and see what I can do for you," generally means no.

Drastic Changes in New Chapeaux

Backward Draped Crown and Embroidered Trimmings Are Important

The Paris openings, displaying fall and winter headgear have been in progress for some time and from among a tremendous variety of new themes one fact stands out sharply—the utility garconne chapeau, for many seasons the dominant millinery type, has been relegated to a position of minor importance. What is far more important, however, this fall it will remain in eclipse, asserts a Paris fashion correspondent in the New York Herald-Tribune.

It is an old, old story, this neglect of the cloche and its variations at the openings. Season after season Reboux, Agnes and Rose Descat have bravely launched a campaign intended to shatter the hardy cloche tradition. At each new millinery showing in recent years every conceivable type of elaborate hat was exhibited, not only by this eminent Paris triumvirate but by their minor satellites throughout the various continents as well. Simplicity was carefully shunned; the all-occasion garconne chapeau, mannish to the point of severity, was deliberately slighted, partly in the interests of art and partly for reasons economic. And then, as each new season rose to its height, the high crowns and the broad brims, the feathered models and the flowered models, would fade from the landscape while the disdained cloche rode high on the crest of the mode—an inevitable item in every smart woman's wardrobe. The fashionables had pointed thumbs down on the valiant efforts of the Paris modistes.

This season the characteristic prologue of elaborate millinery was once more offered by the Paris modistes. More than that, deliberate campaigns were launched, their purposes being to foster ornate millinery and to replace the utility hat with the occasion chapeau. Hat consciousness, meaning the discriminating selection of different hats for different functions, was broadcast throughout the land in a final concerted attempt to wean milady from the lure of the simple all-occasion cloche. Yet, despite these splendidly organized efforts, in the early months of the present season it appeared as though the Paris haute monde were once more going to cold-shoulder elaborate millinery into the limbo of the demodes.

1—Hat, Jacket, Purse and Parasol All Developed in Marron Velvet. 2—Hat of Rose-Colored Velvet With Flat Ostrich Tips in Two Tones of Rose. 3—High Draped Hat With Tiny Poke Brim, in Black Velvet.

The Couture Decides.

Unconsciously the haute couture—the dress and coat creators of Paris—stepped into the breach and saved the day for ornate chapeaux, revealing, incidentally, one of the secrets of changing styles. In the present autumn openings elaboration has been the keynote of almost every showing. Severity, mannishness and all the rest of the garconne attributes have been scrupulously avoided in a collection of fall frocks, suits and coats which hark back to the gallant elegancerie of the mauve decade. In the face of this movement, strongly seconded by fashionable society from Deauville to the Lido, in Paris, in London and in New York, even so deeply rooted a custom as the cloche must be compelled to retreat. It is no mirage this time, and with the crisp days of autumn the mondaines of the mode, venturing blithely forth in fanciful frocks and elaborate coats, wear hats that synchronize with this sartorial elegance, whose charm is in a deft manipulation and intricate styling rather than in unalloyed boyish simplicity. Where in earlier seasons the anticloche crusade failed because the couturiers were not in sympathy, this autumn all the forces of fashion are marching in regal unison toward the new elegance, with millinery leading the way.

Chosen from the fall showings of such notable modistes as Caroline Reboux, Agnes, Maria Guy, [illegible], Alix and Le Monnier, the fall hats unmistakably demonstrate the new spirit of millinery. As you glance through the illustrated models you will be struck by the diversity of types shown—indeed, one cannot point definitely to this or that characteristic of an individual hat and indicate a general trend. There are high square crowns and low draped crowns, feathered trimmings and no trimmings, broad brims and hairline brims. Feminine elaboration, of course, is the keynote, but it is arrived at in as many and diverse ways as you might wish—at least there will be no running to type in the millinery of this particular autumn.

Velvet and felt are favored hat fabrics of autumn, and they are far in advance of all others. Velvet is an excellent material with which to achieve decorous effects. Felt is often used in combination with contrasted fabrics—as often it is used alone, but in several different tints not too far apart. Hatters' plush is particularly favored by Maria Guy, while soleil is featured by several other modistes.

4—Fawn-Colored Felt, of Grosgrain Ribbon. 5—Tam With Earmuff Effect, Velvet. 6—Tam, Two Tones of Lilac Velvet Rolled Into Tiny Strips and Joined Together in Circular Fashion.

Reboux is making a particular fetish of the high, square crown, while Agnes, with a backward draped crown, has achieved an effect which is decidedly more youthful. Save among certain types, this high Reboux crown cannot be easily worn. It does not lack in youth, but it is a little too regal, coming after a long succession of boyish hats. When the season is well advanced indications point to a predominance of rounded and draped crowns.

Brims are more diverse and complicated than last season, and there is a decided increase in the number of wider brimmed hats being shown. The maturing season will not witness any sweeping return to picture types, but it will account for more medium brimmed models than in any autumn since the war.

Black and the Wine Range.

Black once more stands first among colors, but it is by no means prescribed. The wine shades are next in frequency, after which come blue and the beige range. It will not be a particularly colorful hat season as far as the hues themselves are concerned, but it will be made striking by the use of unusual ornamentations on sober backgrounds.

For one thing, embroidery is profusely employed on the autumn hats. Paradise plumes, too, are featured, though not so lavishly. Aigrettes and striking ornaments are also used to embellish the new models. Such novel treatments as that of Rose Descat, pasting velvet on the facing of felt hats, are more the rule than the exception. Even feathers—now that the Reboux feather boa is enjoying such a vogue—are used to trim hats, and they emphasize the ensemble note; that is, the boa should be of the same color ostrich as the chapeau trimming.

In summation, elaborate hats have finally been launched successfully, and you need no longer fear that one of these luxuriously trimmed affairs will single you out as behind the mode, or, what is just as bad, awkwardly in advance of it. You may choose freely from among a most diversified assortment, and when you select, have in mind the frock or coat with which this particular hat is to be worn. A formal frock requires a formal hat this season—for sports there are the garconne models. But it is certain the twain should never be mixed.

The varying shades of tan are still the most seen in gloves, since tan is a sufficiently neutral shade to blend with any costume. As in the case of handbags, however, gray gloves are selected for the gray costume, and occasionally one sees a very striking and attractive match between dress and gloves of some more vivid color. White is, of course, worn with the very light ensemble, and it is assured that fall will bring a return of popularity for both the white and the black glove.

Supreme Honor

"Look heah, brudders," complained an old preacher who had just been appointed chaplain of a new colored lodge. "How come youall get such gran' names, an' I ain't nuffin but jes' plain chaplain. Something's got to be done or I resigns frum dis here lodge."

A discussion then arose about what would be a suitable title for the reverend, and a number of suggestions were made; however, none of them suited, until one of the dusky members, struck with a happy inspiration, leaped to his feet and exclaimed:

"Sah, bruddern, Ah moves we calls de reberend Grand Holy Smoke."

Hoornbeek Head Of County Fair

Elected President of Ulster County Agricultural Society in Place of Frank J. Potter, Who Declined Nomination — Annual Meeting Held.

Clarence A. Hoornbeek of Ellenville was elected president of the Ulster County Agricultural Society at the annual meeting held in Ellenville on Monday, succeeding Frank J. Potter, who had declined a renomination after serving as president for the past eighteen years.

Other changes in the personnel of the organization include the election of C. G. A. Fisher as secretary to succeed William S. Doyle, resigned. Mr. Fischer will also act as general manager and will be the only officer to receive pay. The amount of the salary was not made public, although it is understood that the secretary's salary has been increased considerably.

Frank J. Potter was elected first vice president; R. T. Cookingham, second vice president; John McDowell., third vice president. Deyo W. Johnson was named as a director to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of George B. Holmes. E. Gordon Jansen, Daniel Vanderlyn and John Burlison, other directors, whose \ terms expired, were reelected.

The financial report showed disbursements of $28,046.70, with receipts of $28,176.18. These figures run $1,000 behind the 1925 figures for concessions and $1,700 behind on gate receipts, the latter loss being on account of the rain this year.

Quakes Recorded In Three Cities

New York, Dec. 10 (AP)—An earthquake of moderate intensity 1,000 miles from New York was recorded on the seismograph at Fordham University today. On account of weather conditions its direction could not be determined.

The shock was first recorded at 3.49 a. m., and its greatest intensity was reached at 4:01 o'clock.

Registered at Chicago.

Chicago, Dec. 10 (AP).—Earthquake shocks beginning at 2:45 a. m., were registered on the seismograph of the United States weather bureau at the University of Chicago today, and the indication was that the center of the disturbance was 3,000 miles away, probably in a westerly direction. The shocks had a second phase at 2:50 a. m., and ended at 4 a. m.

Disturbance Lasted Two Hours.

Washington, Dec. 10 (AP).—A sharp earthquake was registered on Georgetown University seismograph early today, the maximum being at 3:45 a. m. The disturbance, which was placed by Director Toudorf as 6,200 miles from Washington, lasted two hours.

Pastors Wrangle Over Evolution

Dr. Straton Sure He Will Go to Heaven but Excited Atlanta Clergyman Says He Doubts It.

Atlanta, Ga., Dec. 10 (AP).—An address on "man or monkey which?" delivered here by Dr. John Roach Straton, pastor of the Cavalry Baptist Church of New York city, was brought to a tumultuous close last night when Dr. Witherspoon Dodge, pastor of the Central Congregational Church of Atlanta, sought to question the speaker on the accuracy of his interpretation of evolution.

After a few heated questions and answers had been exchanged Dr. Straton shouted. "I know what I am. You don't know what you are. And I know, too, that any man who believes in evolution won't be saved. I know I will go to Heaven."

"I doubt it," flung back Dr. Dodge, has face red with anger, as he was shouted down by the audience.

Announcement was made of a national convention to be held at St. Louis next March, of the Supreme Kingdom, a fraternal organization formed here several months ago for the avowed purpose of combating the teaching of evolution.

Another Snowfall Enveloped City

Street Department Snow Removal Equipment Kept Busy Removing Snow From Streets—Will Have Streets Opened for Santa Claus Saturday.

Another snow storm broke over Kingston Thursday night and continued falling until noon when the storm ceased after several inches of snow had fallen.

Superintendent W. Scott Van Keuren of the board of public works stated this morning that as soon as it started snowing Thursday night he had ordered out the snow removal equipment and the work of plowing the streets was again started and would be continued until all of the streets were open.

The snowfall of Sunday and today has proven a blessing to a large number of men who were without work.

Saturday Kingston will be visited by two Santa Clauses and the street department plans to have the streets all opened so that Santa will not be delayed by snow drifts.

Heiress Loved Him So!

Count Ludwig Salm von Hoogstraeten is shown on the stand in his separation suit, being tried in New York, against his wife, Millicent Rogers, heiress to the Rogers fortune. He described his wife's affection before they parted.

Sign of the Cross

One of the astonishing sights to the average American tourist in Europe, is the frequent sight which can be had in very small villages of wealthy and massive churches. I can think of several English hamlets which have churches that American cities might be glad to call cathedrals. On an automobile trip to Paris recently, it was true in several places. At Bonny, for example, I noticed a fine gray ancient church, which would have looked in its proper setting in Chicago or Boston. How could such a small village have a million-dollar edifice? I suppose the local nobility in older days were largely responsible. It had also a fine marble statue of Joan of Arc.—Detroit Free Press.

One "Bad Egg"

A school teacher relates that she was giving her small pupils a lesson on birds, and after telling about the hatching of the eggs, the care of the mother bird and the first lessons in flying, she said: "Now, children, I am the mother bird and you are the little birds nestled in your cozy nest I want you all to spread your wings and fly away." Each child, waving arms to the music she beat, skipped to the dressing room, with the exception of one little fellow who remained motionless in his seat. Turning to him, she said: "Donald, why didn't you fly away with all the other little birds?" "'Cause," came the prompt and unexpected reply, "'Cause I was a bad egg."—Boston Transcript.

His Speech a Solo

Einstein, despite his lectures about his famous and complicated theory of relativity, is a poor impromptu speaker and he hates to be called upon suddenly for an address. At a dinner of the intellectual co-operation committee of the League of Nations at Geneva recently, Einstein was unexpectedly called on by the toastmaster. Instead of speaking, the great scientist went quickly over to the musicians' box, borrowed a violin and played magnificently for the astonished guests.

New York Breeds Better Birds

Ithaca, N. Y., Dec. 10 (AP)—Poultry men in New York state are breeding better birds every year, reports the poultry department at Cornell University which just completed its certification work for this season. Certification of poultry is based on breeding only, and although 7 per cent less farmers had their birds examined for certification by the department 15 per cent more birds were certified.

In all, 73,681 birds were handled for 210 breeders, and 42,908 birds were certified. This is the largest number to meet the approval of the department in any one year since the work was begun eight years ago.

Trial Not Necessary After the Election

President Roosevelt never turned a deaf ear to his Spanish war rough riders when they appealed to him for help. On one occasion a rough rider was indicted for killing a man in a western state and he wrote to the President, asking for a loan of $200 to hire a lawyer to defend him. The crime had taken place in some sort of ranch brawl. In keeping with his custom, the President sent the requested $200, never expecting to see it again, James Amos, former family servant of the Roosevelts, relates in an article in Collier's Weekly. However, a short time later, much to his surprise, he got another letter from the same man, returning the $200. The letter said in substance:

"Dear Teddy: I'm sending back the money I borrowed to help at my trial. We didn't need to have no trial, as we elected our district attorney."

Black Phosphorus

Black phosphorus, hitherto supposed to be pure phosphorus turned black as result of sudden cooling, is produced by the contact of phosphorus with mercury on which it can react at the moment when it passes from the liquid to the solid state. Molten phosphorus dissolves mercury, giving a colorless solution. When cooled the saturated solution remains colorless in all low temperatures, but if the phosphorus solidifies the solidification is very weak and the mercury leaves the solidified phosphorus and colors it black.

If black phosphorus is melted, the mercury is easily redissolved in the surrounding phosphorus and the whole body becomes colorless. This is the correct explanation of the phenomenon.

POULTRY

FEEDING PULLETS IN COLD SEASON

Pullets must be well developed, vigorous and must carry a surplus of body fat if they are to produce heavily during the winter months.

D. C. Henderson, poultry specialist in the South Dakota State college extension service, says that pullets which come into laying with weak frames and undeveloped bodies usually break down under the strain of egg production during the winter months. He advises a careful feeding program for pullets so that they will have the surplus body fat so necessary to heavy egg production.

"Feeds containing protein and minerals are essential for proper growth of bones, feathers and muscles," he says. "Skim milk, if available in sufficient quantity, is an excellent feed. The birds should be given access to the milk at all times. It can be fed either in the sweet or sour form.

"If the milk is limited, part of the protein may be supplied through the use of meat scraps or tankage in a mash mixture."

A dry mash mixture which Henderson advises for satisfactory development of pullets is composed of one part each by weight of cornmeal, ground heavy oats, wheat bran, flour middlings and tankage.

One pound of salt should be added to each 100 pounds of mash. If a limited amount of milk is available, one-half part of tankage may be fed in the mash. Dry mash should be kept in the hoppers before the birds at all times.

Grain is necessary for the proper storing of a reserve of fat in the body, states the specialist. Late hatched pullets should be forced heavily with both bran and mash to develop flesh and bone, essential in continuous heavy egg production. Early hatched pullets, that are well developed and are coming into laying should be fed heavily on grain feeds and sparingly on dry mash. The pullet flock must carry a surplus of body flesh, obtained primarily from grain feeds, if they are to give profitable winter egg production.

Late Laying Hens Best for Building Up Flock

Eggs usually are the chief source of income from the farm poultry business and one of the quickest ways to build up the egg-laying capacity of the flock is to breed from the best of the late laying hens rather than from the young pullets which have not had a chance to show their worth as layers. Only those late laying hens which have the proper size, type and other desirable characteristics should be used in the breeding pen. Poorly colored birds and those with disqualifications, such as side sprigs on the comb and stubs on the legs, are undesirable as breeders, the poultrymen say.

The most desirable of the late laying hens which molt as late as September 15 or later should be mated with the best males of the flock or preferably with males secured from a breeder of a good strain of production-bred stock.

Arranging Nests for Easy Cleaning Is Best Plan

Arrange nests for the hens and the new pullets as soon as possible. It is best they become accustomed to this equipment so that they are not afraid of it later on. If possible, build the nests in a long row, using a 12-inch board for the base, and square sections of same for partitions. Fasten together with hooks like screen door hooks, so the whole structure will come apart for thorough cleaning. This is infinitely better than nailing up a few old boxes, and expecting the hens to use them.

Hens prefer dark nests, and if given choice between a dark nest, and a light nest, will almost always avoid the light. It is convenient, also, if you can arrange the nests along the wall, so that the eggs can be taken up without going into the scratching area. This is convenient, and avoids disturbing the chickens.

Attend to Ventilation

Those who expect any great number of winter eggs from old hens are doomed to disappointment unless they have especially favorable conditions such as electric lights. Old hens will molt. The poor layers start shedding in June while the best hens may not do so until late in the fall. And once in a while there is a hen that does not molt until December.

One must depend upon the pullet flock for satisfactory early winter egg production.

Blood Spots in Eggs

Blood spots in eggs are due to various causes, and often are not serious so far as the flock is concerned. Such spots are found quite commonly in eggs from commercial flocks, and unless in unusual numbers call for no change in management. If they do appear in larger numbers, examination of the ration to find whether there is not something wrong with it is recommended. The cause is sometimes feeding condimental feeds such as pepper.

Close Enough

I don't try to picture what heaven is like, for anybody; but when there's plenty on the table, and more where that came from, that's purty much what I think it must be like.—Atlanta Constitution.

Two-Piece Frock Shows No Sign of Dropping Out

Smart, youthful and almost universally becoming, the two-piece frock shows no sign of being cast into outer darkness so far as fashion is concerned. It seems incredible that any mode could be introduced, but early collection of fall models proves that fashion designers have lost none of their skill or inventiveness.

In almost every group of models one finds several developed on two-piece lines. These are distinguished by subtle changes of silhouette and by details of decoration that give them a different and more interesting aspect.

Velvet, which last winter staged a comeback after a long absence from the fashions of several seasons, is from all indications to have a more successful season this year. Many of the smartest new hats from the most important milliners of both continents show clever uses of velvet, while any number of frocks in patterns resembling old-fashioned quilting are much in evidence as decoration on the new frocks.

The Higher Life

What I know is that there is more in life than anything man can do or say, that there is an immortal spirit whose history, whose struggles, whose victories and defeats give the whole meaning to this life which is only one short paragraph in the book of that greater life. These are our fleshy conditions and we must obey them, but through them, always, we must be waiting, listening, for ever at attention to catch the movement of that other life. Your honor, your courage, your sacrifice, your gentleness, kindliness, if you lose these things you had as well be a sheep's carcass hanging in any butcher's.—Hugh Walpole.

Peas From Old Stock

In one English village most of the green peas are grown from a stock of seeds said to have been taken from the case of an Egyptian mummy.

Mullet's Legal Standing

The bureau of fisheries says that the mullet is a fish. The question arose many years ago, when an attempt was made to restrict the catching of certain kinds of fish in North Carolina, the mullet among them. A fisherman was apprehended who had caught a mullet. His defense was that the mullet had a gizzard instead of a stomach—therefore, it was a fowl. The judge agreed with him.

Day of Amateurism Is Passing

"Red" Grange, who is leading in the campaign to professionalize football, with plans for two "major leagues."

American sport in almost every department is falling rapidly into the grip of commercialism.

Football, tennis, golf and swimming are fast going the way of baseball and boxing to professionalism.

Big business and box office receipts are beginning to dominate the playing fields. Frank Merriwell and his doughty group of last-minute touchdown makers are doomed to the dust of the top shelf. Instead, there will be the story of the boy dashing through a broken field to a touchdown and contract at $50,000 with which to raise the mortgage on the farm.

Becoming Vast Business.

These statements summarize a remarkable article on the present condition of American sport written by Robert F. Kelley and published in Good Housekeeping. The article says in part:

"Sport is on the verge of becoming a vast business proposition. Today it is impossible in any of our sports—save possibly one or two—to be an amateur, as that term was understood by our fathers.

"Baseball was the first brick in the edifice of industrialized sport. It has gone from a game to a kind of business with vast concrete theaters and $50,000 salaries. At one time college baseball was as important as college football is today.

"Red Grange, this year, is planning two professional football leagues with a world's series. If this succeeds, we will see the end of football as a great amateur sport.

Millions Spent on Football.

"Every year millions of dollars are spent on football. Coaches are hired at tremendous salaries and elaborate equipment is used. There are stadiums of incredible proportions which must be financed and handled on a business plane. Behind the scenes of inter-collegiate football are business managers, treasurers and advisory committees similar to a corporation's board of directors. No longer is a football team a group of boys playing the game for the fun of it.

"With the popularization of tennis have come tennis stadiums and gate receipts mounting to large figures. The United States Lawn Tennis association maintains a large office with a salaried officer and staff of stenographers under full blast throughout the year. A group of star tennis players chase the sun around the world to play tennis all the year, their living expenses paid by committees and associations. Is this amateurism as we used to know it?

"Suzanne Lenglen and Mary K. Browne are the first to turn outright professionals; others will follow as the financial rewards become larger and larger.

Swimming Follows Suit.

"Channel swimming seems to have become one of the most lucrative enterprises that the world has ever known; and long-distance swimming competitions are now being arranged in this country."

Two chief sports into which professionalism has not yet entered, according to the Good Housekeeping article, are rowing and polo. "There are no gate receipts in rowing for it is impossible to build giant stadiums along rivers to keep out those who do not pay. Polo remains the game of men of great wealth who can afford the cost of mounts."

Released From Life When Columbia Wins

Dave Goldstein won't have to spend the rest of his life in the halls of learning at Columbia university. The defeat of Cornell by the Columbia football team won him his release.

In 1921, Goldstein, then a senior, made a wager with a girl student at Barnard college that he would continue his schooling at Columbia until a Cornell football team was defeated by a Columbia eleven. During all his years of study he won successively degrees of A. B., LL. B., B. S., M. A., and was on his way to a Ph. D. when Columbia defeated Cornell on the gridiron for the first time in 21 years.

McInnis' Unique Record

It is doubtful if the owner of the Philadelphia Nationals could have selected a manager better qualified to take charge of the team than "Stuffy" McInnis.

For years the Phillies have been a tailender, a rank one most of the time. McInnis has had plenty of experience with such clubs.

During the days when the Athletics were a confirmed tailender, McInnis held down first base for Mack.

After that he played engagements with both Boston clubs and gained more experience as to how to handle a tailender.

Why Jennings Quit the Giants

Scranton, Pa., Dec. 10 (AP).—In explaining why he had withdrawn as coach of the New York Giants, Hughey Jennings asserted that it was because he had been shunned while ill by Judge Francis X. McQuade and Charles Stoneham, owners of the club.

"The day that I went into a nervous breakdown, caused principally because I over exerted myself in an effort to give the New York National League team every ounce of energy I had in my system in 1924 and 1925 while Manager John J McGraw was ill," said Jennings, "Judge Francis X. McQuade and Chales Stoneham, owners of the Giants, absolutely deserted me, cut me off the payroll and from that day to this never directly asked me by wire or letter or word of mouth how I felt. Those two men, along with their secretary Joe Tierney, shunned me in every way, and proved to me that they are unfit for me to have any dealings with, and therefore, I am through with the Giants, much as I would like to go back to mingle with my real friend, John J. McGraw, manager of the club, who stuck with me all the way through and did all he could to assist me in recovery.

"When one is down and out physically and can't see much brightness in life, one can be helped only by those whom he feels are his friends and God, to whom I gave my thanks for my complete recovery.

Sport Briefs Of All Sorts

(By The Associated Press)

Miller Huggins, diminutive manager of the New York Yankees, gazed far into the baseball future at the minor league baseball meeting in Asheville, N. C. "I made no deals," he said, "but I've a lot of them set up for 1929. This is the place to fix to get the boys in the future. You've got to know who is coming up and play for them."

Alf Goullet, dean of the six-day bike riders, has his cap off this week to the veteran Reggie McNamara, his closest rival for highest honors as the leading pedaler of all time in the sleepless grinds. While Alf, with his partner in the race at Madison Square Garden is at the tail end of the procession Reggie is one of the leaders. "You simply can't do anything with a guy like that," he announced last night as he watched the "iron man" steal a lap. McNamara is 38 years old, Goullet 37.

The Victoria Hockey Club of Montreal, one of the oldest in Canada, will sail from New York January 22 to demonstrate the dominion ice game in Sweden. The sextette will visit Berlin and Vienna.

K. H. S. SECONDS WILL PLAY CLINTON FIVE

In every match of previous seasons when the Kingston High School Second team has met the Clinton Avenue quintet, lively contests have resulted. Consequently a stiff battle is expected to hold again this Saturday night when the Maroon and White second outfit invades Epworth Hall for the first time this season.

The Clintons have won four straight games in contests played this year and are in danger of having this winning streak severed Saturday night. Coach O'Leary's second quintet is a strong outfit and will no doubt hold its own with the Methodist team. Last season one of the best contests of the year resulted when these teams came together.

Never start anything your wife can't finish.

eward Children or Father's Deed

aples, N. Y., Dec. 10 (AP)—Good ds done by one generation without reward or recognition have efited those of another generation in a Naples family.

ecently three children of the late ber Eldridge, of Naples, were ined they had been bequeathed 476 each in the will of J. A. kley of New Haven, Conn., because of kindness their father had shown the New Haven man.

The nature of the good deed is unknown. Mr. Eldridge served in the Civil War as a member of Company D, 126th New York Volunteers, and Mr Yeckley also was a Civil War veteran. The Naples veteran seldom talked of his wartime experiences, but a son, George, recalls that once during his childhood he heard his father tell of taking care of a seriously wounded comrade in the war hospital where he himself was recovering from head wounds, and he now believes his father referred to Mr. Yeckley.

The son also remembers that one day while he and his father were seated on the home door step a stranger approached the house. The father gazed intently at the man, then rushed down the path and greeted him affectionately. The son asked who the stranger was and Mr. Eldridge replied. "Oh, a man I helped out when he was sick." The stranger also was believed to have been Mr. Yeckley.

Mr. Eldridge kept a diary, and brief entries indicate occasional meetings had developed into a lasting friendship with Mr. Yeckley, but further than the notations the diary does not explain.

Merits of the Fuchsia

The fuchsia is one of the gardener's most valuable plants, not only for the beauty of its flowers and graceful form of the plant but also because it is adaptable to flower beds and borders and grows with such freedom and such little care. As a house plant it is very desirable, says the Rocky Mountain News.

He Holds Every Office in Town

Nome, Alaska, Dec. 10—To be United States Commissioner, postmaster, chairman of the school board, commanding officer of a garrison, leading citizen, and to occupy the best house in the town all rolled into one constitutes a formidable role for one man. Yet that is the position of Private Elmer J. Clen, Signal Corps, United States Army who as the army's single local representative operates the signal corps' radio station at Wiseman Alaska.

Wiseman lies far above the Arctic Circle, almost in the shadow of the North Pole, where the aurora borealis provides the street lighting system and the vari-colored advertisements for approximately nine months of the year, and is, for all practicable purposes, the most northern point to which civilization has penetrated. There the Signal Corps has established a radio station in order that the few pioneers who choose to live in igloos may keep contact with the outside world. A regular schedule of communications is maintained.

Prior to the establishment of this military radio station, Wisemen and its inhabitants were completely cut off from civilization for nine months each year, during which time it is impossible to reach the settlement even with dog teams. Now, however, these residents of the polar regions may tune in on San Francisco and other large western cities and pass away the long winter evening from about September to May along with the same class of entertainment and up-to-the-minute news enjoyed by those who are within hailing distance of Broadway. Naturally they are disposed to heap honors upon Private Clen, the link connecting them with the outside world and making their entertainment possible.

Mountain Elevator

The great "lift" to carry aspiring tourists who would eschew the combined joys and labors of the mountain climber to the top of the rugged Wetterhorn, in Switzerland, is one of the most interesting devices in the world.

It goes up by two stages, each about 2,000 feet high. The passenger cages are lifted by a drum-wound rope and guided by two pairs of steel cables, each about an inch and three-quarters in diameter, and possessing a tensile strength of 330 tons, 10 times the maximum put upon them. The cars are attached to these cables in such a manner as to avert a fall in case of the breaking of one of the lifting ropes. The cars, weighing 5¼ tons, and carrying 20 passengers apiece, are lifted vertically at a speed of about five feet a second.

Flashes of Life Sketched in Brief

(By The Associated Press)

Chicago—Seems as if the secret of Mussolini's dictatorship must be out at last. Baseball bats helped the Fascisti get started to power; now no unauthorized person in Bologna may carry a bat. David A. Shillinglaw, who helped Uncle Sam salvage army supplies in France, says he sold four carloads of bats in Italy. He has received word from a Fascist that they were used by the Blackshirts for a flying start.

New York—Modest Will Rogers insists his stuff is antique, but perhaps that's a joke. When Patricia Burke Ziegfeld laid the cornerstone of her daddy's new theatre Will had this to say: "What little monologue I am giving was gleaned from the first cornerstone laid in New York. All my stuff is about that ancient."

New York—There's a double engagement in the Vanderbilt clan for the first time in social history. The Misses Adele and Alice Hammond, sisters, descendants of the commodore, are to marry, respectively, John K. Olyphant, New York banker and captain of infantry in the war, and George Arthur Victor Duckworth, young British banker, whose father was a major in the war.

Chicago—Red silk stockings worn by Queen Elizabeth have brought only $15 at a sale.

New York—Maria Jeritza of opera is the proud possessor of a Gothic sculptured red verona marble doorway dating from the Fourteenth century. It cost her $400 at auction.

Melbourne—Apparently there is something in first class tennis as a preparation for a career. The famous Norman Brookes is chairman of the board of a new ten million dollar corporation.

New York—John D. Rockefeller, Sr., and Jr, have lost a fight for a residential oasis between business buildings in West 57th street off Fifth avenue. The city authorities have decided to open this district of aristocratic homes to trade.

London—A brunette and a blonde are leading a campaign for votes for women under 30, and Trudie Ederle's feat will be one of their talking points. Sandwich boards in a parade will read: "We can X the Channel, but may not X a ballot." Also, "gentlemen prefer blondes, blondes prefer the vote."

New York—The stock market seems intent upon being Santa Claus for somebody. The average of 25 leading issues, by one compilation, is the highest in history—139 34.

Chinese Travel Only by Rules of Compass

Travelers in China have discovered that the words "right" and "left" or their equivalents are useless in connection with street directions, for in China all directions are given according to the points of the compass. The 'ricksha coolie, instructed to turn to his left, would be confused, and, even though he understood clearly, which would not be likely if the instructions came from a novice in the language, he would hesitate before complying with the suggestion, says a writer in the North China Herald. A Chinese in a strange city, however, has his bearings as soon as he arrives, and never loses them for a moment. Advised to go east to a cross street, north to a diagonal street, northwest to another cross street and thence east to a house on the south side with a big red door, he would follow instructions implicitly and without an instant's hesitation.

Nelle—I believe you are hopelessly in love with me.

Fred—But, dear, how did you guess?

Nelle—Well, I knew that if you were in love with me at all it was hopelessly.

TO SEARCH SAHARA FOR CITY OF BRASS

French Archeologists Think It May Be Found.

The report that a French expedition was being sent out to search the Sahara from Tugurt to Timbuktu for the City of Brass will raise a vision in the mind's eye of every lover of the Arabian Nights, and he will wish he could join the archeologists in the hope of getting a glimpse of the two tall towers of Andalusian brass, gleaming in the sunshine like twin beacon fires.

They would expect to find the city just as it was seen last by the expedition sent by the caliph to Morocco for bottled jinn. (Printer and proofreader, leave this word alone, the Commander of the Faithful was a prohibitionist). He would expect to find intact the walls so vast that it took a camel two days to ride round them, and when he had forced his entrance into one of the 25 visible portals, he would make his way through the deserted streets and bazaars, past the dried and shriveled bodies of the soldiers and salesmen, and their unguarded stores of all sorts of jewels and wares, everything except food, on up to the palace where, under the alabaster cupola supported by golden pillars, the fair damsel lay seemingly asleep on a couch beneath the canopy.

He would recognize her as Tadmurah, daughter of the king of the Amalekites, but he would not attempt to wake her, as Brunhilda and the Sleeping Beauty were awakened, for he remembers what the copper statues of the two slaves stationed at the bedside did to the Wazir.

Is all this but the glittering dream of a Bagdad teller of tales? Or was there once a city in the heart of Mauritania where a seven-year drought starved the people in the midst of their wealth, and the poor little rich girl could not barter fine pearls for poor wheat, grain for grain?

The Arabs still tell of such a lost city, and Sir Richard Burton believed them. So apparently do the French, enough to undertake a journey of over 2,000 miles across the desert on such a quest.

Even if they do not find the fabled City of Brass, they are sure to discover many another lost city that has been starved out and buried in the rising tide of sand.

These old legends, when sifted, often turn out to have a grain of truth in them. They used to be thought a mere myth.

But we now know that Troy was. We can today explore the labyrinth of the Minotaur without the thread of Ariadne.

And most recently "the Nameless City" of the Syrian desert, forgotten for 1,500 years, has been visited for one day by archeologists of the University of Chicago and its wonderful wall paintings photographed—just in time to preserve the record, for they were obliterated by the Arabs as soon as the British troops withdrew.—Edwin E. Slosson, Director of Science Service, in Collier's.

Broad Here, Narrow There

Dr. John Roach Straton has been defeated in his fight to exclude from membership in the Baptist church all who have not been baptized by total immersion, and a New York Baptist was talking about him the other day. He said:

"Straton is narrow in theory and very broad in practice. His is always the first hand to be held out to the sinner.

"A sinner of the secret kind came a cropper one day. The scandal was terrific. Everybody was hard on the man, but Straton only shook his head and sighed:

"'Aren't all our reputations built up on what isn't found out about us?'"

Keyless Lock

Something new in the way of locks is the keyless style, as described in Popular Science Magazine. This invention works with a combination like that of a safe and thus saves the carrying of a bulky key. The combination is controlled by a series of ten rings along the edge of the lock, capable of 1,024 combinations, of which the owner may take his choice. Since it is worked by touch the owner can, after a little practice, open it in the dark. No remedy is suggested in case the owner forgets the combination.

There's the Rub

THE WHAT, WHEN AND HOW OF REMEMBRANCES... DON'T GUESS —ASK YOUR JEWELER

MANY of the services rendered us are labors of love and intimate friendship.

They are above and beyond any suggestion of monetary reward . . . and too richly laden with sentiment to permit of any remembrance of fleeting worth.

Each such service should be recognized with a gift that lasts—a gift as enduring as the sentiment it betokens.

But how to express a gift impulse so as neither to overstep the bounds of good taste nor understate gratitude . . . that is the delicate problem of gift-giving.

What shall be the type of gift from a bridegroom to his best man . . . to his ushers . . . what gift form will best express to an intimate friend regret over an impending parting? These are but a few of the myriad delicate gift-questions that continually arise.

When you have a gift problem—don't guess—go to an acknowledged expert for authoritative counsel.

See your Jeweler. He is a past-master in the science of appropriate gift-selection. And his consultations are free.
